Three long and lank and gloomy Tennessecons paid THE EVENING WORLD a call this moraing. They had a grievance, but were exceeding reticent about it. It was extracted in small chunks by reportorial forceps and found to be of a familiar sort. The three had ome on from the mountains with good, hardearned money in their pocaets to buy "green goods" that were such ciever counterfeits of Treasury greenbacks that they would deceive Uncle Sam himself.

Foxy were these three mountaineers. They didn't give their names for publication because their wives, at home, who had been promised new gowns and binnets, would "feel bad" if they should happen to learn how unusually slick husbands had been swindled.

And then the neighbors, too, might lose confidence in the integrity of the three. It took a deal of coaxing to get James D. Mayes, of Bacchus Post-Office, and Davis Tolbert, of Taxwell, Tenn., to give their names, and when they did it was with sheepish races

BUCK ON HIS DEFENSE His Counsel Goes on the Theory that the Keeper Was a Dupe.

UTICA, June 2.—The defence opened this positions. He did not believe Buck had done his duty, but he was the victim of those high in authority. He said the evidence he would present would show the man to be a dupe.

He scored the Warden for not having O'Brien shaved and for letting him go out of the prison with a green man when he had been brought there under a guard of six men, handcuffed and in frons.

Buck was placed on the stand and detailed his life. He kept a saloon in New York and then went into the Custom-House. This place he lost and asked Jim Jones, Port Warde, to get him a job. Jones wrote Supt. Lathrop, and he soon got orders to report at Dannemora. He told about the arrival or the Dishler party and the various transactions at the prison. Warden Thayer told Dishler he thought Buck would treat O'Brien right and not to severe. Atterwards Tayer told o'Brien that Buck would treat him as well as he consistently could.

Thayer said the Irons could be taken of on the train and in the bedroem, but did not teil Buck that O'Brien was dangerous or slippery.
